U.S. 'Charters of Freedom' to be displayed in the county

In the next few months, residents of Macon County won't have to travel to Washington, D.C. to get a glimpse of the nation's foundation documents, the Charters of Freedom. Last week, the Macon County Board of Commissioners unanimously voted to accept a gift from Foundation Forward, a non-profit that builds monuments around the country to display replicas of the Declaration of Independence, U.S. Constitution and Bill of Rights.

The Charters of Freedom are our country's founding documents. These three original documents, The Declaration of Independence, The United States Constitution and The Bill of Rights, are on display in the National Archives in Washington, D.C. They are open to the public and free to view.

Perry Snider from Foundation Forward presented commissioners with the option to build a monument for the documents out of brick, at

Highlands benefits from liquor sales at ABC Store

On Monday, Oct. 17, representatives of the Highlands ABC Store distributed funds to six recipients.

Each year, per state statute, after operating expenses are met, the ABC stores in North Carolina must distribute any leftover monies to various organizations within their municipalities, including the police department and the municipality itself.

The police department uses the funds to educate youth about drug and alcohol abuse. The disbursement made to the town goes into the General Fund.

Mayor Pat Taylor accepted two checks -- one to the town for

Leatherman and Gillespie vie for District 2

With District II on the Macon County Board of Commissioners without an incumbent seeking election this November, two new candidates are vying for the open seat. Republican candidate Karl Gillespie is seeking his first term in office and his first political position while Charlie Leatherman, who is on the Democratic ticket, has previously served two terms on the commission, but served as a Republican then.

Karl Gillespie has owned a business in Macon County since 1999 when he started National Communications, Inc (NCI). A fifth generation Maconian, Gillespie is actively involved in civic organizations serving on the Macon County Planning Board and the Southwestern Community College Board of Trustees.

Gillespie is running for office as a way to give back to his

Important issues to be discussed tonight

The October Highlands Town Board meeting is scheduled for tonight, at the Highlands Community Building beginning at 7 pm. There are a couple of major agenda items.

Kevin O'Donnell, our Nova Energy consultant, will update the board on two items. First, there will be an increase in REP fees that are a part of each monthly electric bill. Duke is required to generate a certain percentage of their power from green energy sources such as solar and wind. Customers are charged a fee for this program. The current 70 cent charge for residential customers will go to $1.26, and for commercial customers the increase will be from $4.60 to $5.80. These fees apply to all Duke Energy customers throughout their system.

Kevin will also update the board on impending coal ash fees. As I noted earlier this year, we expected to learn about the proposed coal ash fees after the dust had settled in Raleigh. As anticipated the issue was resolved between Duke, the legislature and the governor at the end of the last legislative session this summer.

Mayor Pat Taylor

Now Duke is entering the phase of setting the fees. Kevin will advise us as to what options we have, if any. When these fees are imposed, they will be on a coal ash line of each customer's bill.

Another major item tonight will be the staff report on commercial garbage. In my last article I outlined some of the content of this carefully developed report.

An annual deficit in the commercial side of the sanitation department has been identified. The board will begin the process of addressing this deficit by discussing the related issues. The staff report makes several corrective recommendations. The board will carefully review, possibly modify and finally approve some or all of these recommendations. I do not expect any major action to come from this discussion tonight. I am certain the board will be very deliberate and examine all aspects of the problem before taking final action. The process may take several months before changes are made. Nevertheless, state officials who oversee our enterprise operations will not allow the town to continue to operate commercial trash collection with annual shortfalls. We have to operate commercial trash pickup as if it were a business, not just a town service.

The board will also go into closed session at the end of the meeting to begin a review of applicants who have applied for the town planner and town manager positions. After the applications have been screened and reviewed, interviews of the top candidates for each position will begin. Our personnel office has been advertising these two positions for a number of weeks in local, state and national outlets. As a result, we now have an adequate pool of applicants for the planner position and a substantial pool for town manager. I believe we will have a town planner on board very soon. The town manager position hopefully should be filled by the end of the year.

Join us tonight.

• THANK YOU •

A special tribute and thank you to Allen 'Buck' Trott

The Special Operations Warrior Foundation (SOWF) received a donation from the Special Operations Adventure Race (SOAR) Board of directors in memory of Allen "Buck" Trott. Our Special Operators keep faith with our nation by serving in dangerous and difficult places, enduring long family separations. When tragedy strikes, our Foundation keeps faith with them.

Buck was a wonderful person who served his country with distinction and honor. Following his military retirement his commitment to serve and outstanding leadership continued. Over the past 14 years Buck supported the surviving children of our fallen special operators. His compassion and heartwarming dedication to help others was ever present as he led the effort to establish the Special Operations Adventure Race (SOAR) organization to benefit SOWF. The SOAR events raised over $600,000 and since 2002 celebrated the college graduation of 232 children. Additionally, 940 wounded special operators received financial assistance while recuperating from combat wounds.

Buck would be proud to know that 158 children are in college today. Buck made it possible for these children to now venture forward to make a difference in world! Another 700 children will have the opportunity to attend college when they graduate high school and hundreds of children, from kindergarten through senior year of college, receive in-home tutoring should they need academic assistance.

We thank you for allowing us to share these past 14 years with Buck. He was an inspiration to us all and changed the lives of over a thousand children. We will miss him.

Community turns out for 'Empty Bowls'

On October 2, over 200 people attended the sixth annual Empty Bowls Fundraiser at First Presbyterian Church. The Empty Bowls Project is an effort to raise funds and awareness concerning hunger in our community. Guests at a simple soup luncheon took home a hand-made bowl to keep as a reminder of all the empty bowls in the world. In Highlands, all proceeds benefitted The Food Pantry of Highlands, a collaborative project of the International Friendship Center and Highlands United Methodist Church.

Our local effort was initiated by the Bascom Center for the Arts in 2011. Each year they have provided hundreds of bowls for simultaneous events in Highlands and Cashiers. We are grateful to The Bascom for sponsoring this effort and for providing staff, space, and equipment to meet their goal of 250 bowls for this event. Special thanks to Frank Vickery, Ceramics Program Coordinator, who worked tirelessly to see that goals were met.

Talking Politics

Bruce Katz

What I have taken to calling the Kaepernick Kerfuffle has highlighted, at least for me, the nature of discourse in 21st century American politics. Colin Kaepernick is the biracial quarterback of the NFL's San Francisco 49ers who recently protested the treatment of black Americans by police in America by refusing to stand during the playing of the national anthem at the start of a preseason football game. It was one person staging a protest in a highly public forum.

Certainly in America we have a long and storied history of dissent. Our nation began two and a half centuries ago in dissent writ very large. And change, whether one embraces it or not, typically flows from some form of dissent. We have both the Constitutional right and the historical responsibility to express dissent when we're so moved, and we have the obligation to acknowledge it when dissent presents to us in a peaceful manner. We also have the constitutionally guaranteed right to dissent against dissent, again, peacefully, when confronted by it.

While I may agree with Colin Kaepernick's underlying message that racism exists and, unfortunately, depending on your perspective, flourishes in our otherwise great nation, I do not agree that dishonoring the flag is necessarily the best or even the correct manner in which to deliver that message. That stated, the purpose of any message is to get attention and the quarterback has certainly succeeded in accomplishing that. The flag, and what it represents, gives Kaepernick the right to express his dissatisfaction, and gives those who disagree the right to do so as well. It's a manifestation of our constitutional system working.

The thing that strikes me about the whole affair is how it underscores the boisterous national conversation we're having in America. It seems to me global issues, such as healthcare, our economy, or intervention elsewhere in the world take a backseat before the national stage to matters involving individual liberty and how these highly personal discussions steal and then hold the spotlight in our society.

This year marks the thirteenth presidential election in which I'll be voting. It's the nastiest, most unpleasant such contest in my memory and thanks to more and newer platforms of communication, I don't have confidence it will change in the future. But I live with the hope that it will, because elections are important and when the tone turns people off, the substance becomes the loser.

My mother, as with so many of her generation, warned against ever talking about either politics or religion when engaging in polite conversation. These days, I'm not sure there is such a thing as polite conversation, especially when politics, or religion, or gender is the venue of the discussion. You have to be careful what you talk about, and with whom.

Years ago, I attended a political fundraiser for a friend/Congressman who was running for reelection. On one side of me at dinner sat a woman I knew but not well. On the other side sat a man who I knew a bit better. The seating arrangement, actually, was a tad prophetic.

Before our host introduced the candidate in order for him to do 'the ask,' with no foreplay or preliminary conversation, the woman to my right asked me if I would clearly articulate my position on abortion.

"OK" I said. "I don't like abortions but ..."

"There are no buts!" she interrupted, emphatically.

"But," I said, ignoring her interruption, "I honestly don't think I deserve an opinion on the subject because I have a Y chromosome and most likely therefore will never have to consider having one." I can be snarky sometimes when the spirit so directs me.

"Oh," she said. "You're one of those."

Careful, Bud, I said to myself. "One... of... those... what, exactly?" I asked. It was dinner so she had a knife in one hand and a fork in the other. Sizing me up as if I were seven, she put her weapons, er, utensils down and said in a way too kindly voice, "One of those fence-sitting mugwumps who won't land in either one camp or the other."

I avoided the multiple redundancy issue and sat up straighter than I might have been sitting earlier.

"Look," I said, "I'm sincere about this. If anyone in my sphere were to ask my advice about getting an abortion I would probably counsel them not to. First, there are other options, such as adoption, and second, there are both physical and emotional health considerations that can be pretty devastating.”

“So, there you are,” she said, with more triumph in her tone than the comment merited.

“No,” I said. “Here I am. I’m a man. It’s not something I have to decide for myself. And, I don’t believe I have a right to tell you or any other woman what she ought to do about anything.”

There was a pause while she showed me what she could do with a knife and fork on some red meat. Just to stay in the game, I showed her what I could do with mine on peas and tater tots.

“Exactly how dug in on this are you?” I asked her. “I know the Congressman’s position but I also know that this is pretty much settled law. Women have the right to choose. Why fight a fight you can’t win, legally?”

This time she kept the knife and fork at the ready when she turned to yell at ... er, talk to me.

“It’s the only issue I care about,” she said. I didn’t remind her that as a mature adult, she probably wasn’t going to have to deal with what amounts to a private, personal decision such as having or not having an abortion. I’m pretty sure that’s why I’m still around to recount this event.

“So, no concerns about the economy,” I said, “or about foreign relations, energy policy, national security ...”

“I contribute and I vote based solely on a candidate’s stance on abortion,” she sniffed, adding, “from the top of the ticket, all the way down to the local level.” She had a most satisfied look on her mature adult face.

“Wow,” I said. “I guess it’s good to be that focused. I kind of worry about all of it but I also prefer to pick arenas where I have at least a chance of enjoying some success.”

She exhaled in the manner of someone dismissing someone else and went back to her plate. Two more bites of London broil and she’d earn her dessert.

We didn’t speak for a while. I ate my meal in silence, pondering the powerful single mindedness of my companion to the right.

“Got your lunch eaten there, partner,” the guy to my left said. His name was Charlie. I knew Charlie to be a kind of political schizophrenic, what some might call a moderate. He was a rock-ribbed conservative on some issues and a screaming liberal on others.

“Not true,” I said, pointing at my gut. “Most of this, uh, dinner ended up right where it’s supposed to.”

“You know what I mean,” he said, jerking his head to the right. “Mother Mary over there. No sense getting into it with that one about that thing.”

“She’s entitled to her opinion,” I said. Magnanimous is my middle name. “You can disagree without being disagreeable.” Cliché is my other middle name.

“Ah,” he said, wiping something or other from the left corner of his mouth. “People who are that invested in something don’t ever really cotton to an opposing view.” Then, he threw me one from out in left field, or maybe it was right field.

“Let me ask you a question, what kind of guns you own?”

Now, you have to understand, I knew that politics was going to be on the menu at a political fundraiser. I’d had my portion of abortion so I guess getting grilled on guns was also fair game.

“I don’t own any guns,” I said, adding as quickly as I could, “but I will defend

You haven't seen Mary Adair Trumbly until you have seen her as the hot bimbo nurse. She gives everyone over 55 hope to age as beautifully. a cost of about $25,000. The monuments, if built in brick, will come at no cost to the county and will be constructed wherever Macon leaders decide. If county leaders decide to build the monuments out of granite or limestone, community dollars, not tax dollars, will be raised to cover the additional $20,000 cost.

Macon County Commissioner Gary Shields invited Snider to the monthly board meeting and supported bringing the monuments to the community.

Foundation Forward is a project devoted to providing access to and education about American government, and was spearheaded by Vance Patterson, founder of the nonprofit Foundation Forward Inc., which has installed Charters of Freedom monuments in communities in North Carolina, Illinois, South Carolina, and Indiana.

The monument also will include a time capsule to be opened on Sept. 17, 2087, the 300th anniversary of the writing of the Constitution. The capsule will be opened on the same day as capsules included in Charters of Freedom monuments around the country and will include letters and artifacts from the present-day community.

Foundation Forward's most recent monuments were constructed in Jackson County and were built using brick.

Foundation Forward was created by Patterson after he and his wife Mary Jo visited the monuments in Washington D.C. Patterson was so moved by his experience viewing the documents that he wanted to replicate the experience for communities across the country.

The first Charters of Freedom Monuments were erected in Morganton, North Carolina on July 2, 2014 and have since been gifted to communities across the U.S.

Funds to construct the monuments are raised through donations from private individuals, community organizations, and businesses. No grants or government funds are used for the projects.

According to Snider, the organization works with county officials to contract the construction of the monuments with local businesses and after the monuments are completed, the county will be responsible for maintenance and upkeep.

Commissioner Shields said he would like to see the monuments in front of the courthouse while Commissioner Ronnie Beale noted that the Veterans Memorial Park along the Georgia Road would be a good location.

Macon County agreed to accept the gift from the foundation and will continue discussions to decide where the monument will be constructed and what material – brick, limestone, or granite – will be used.

passionately your right to own as many as you'd care to." Mugwumps of the world, unite!

He looked at me with a mask of curiosity such as one might see on the face of a cat checking out a very timid mouse.

"Why," he said, pausing for emphasis, "don't you own any guns?"

I'd never studied on why I don't own any guns. I had nothing for him.

"I don't know," I said. "Maybe because I prefer to spend my money on nice vacations and comfortable shoes?"

"Let me get this straight, Bud," he said. "You are in favor of the second amendment but you don't own any guns?" Charlie, as I discovered, was not at all schizophrenic, at least not on this particular issue.

I nodded and nodded again. "I'm actually in favor of pretty much all the articles and amendments in our Constitution. Charlie." The imp on my left shoulder whispered for me to cut my losses on this discussion but the one on my right, the one with the pitchfork, told me to jump right in and go for it. I'm a natural jumper.

"I don't see any conflict," I said, "between supporting a right for you to own guns and my right not to. I do think you ought to register your guns, just in case you lose one. Or in case a dozen or so of them get stolen."

"Yep," he said. "THAT, my friend, is the camel's nose under the ... whatever it is camels stick their noses under. First, registration, then, confiscation."

As I said, Charlie was liberal on a number of issues, like abortion, marijuana, feeding the hungry and housing the homeless, but on this one he definitely had his NRA talking points down pat.

"You know," I said, knowing sure as shooting that I was heading straight down a dangerous rabbit hole, "nobody in any real position of authority wants to confiscate your or anyone else's guns, right? Like I told what's-her-name over there it's really settled law."

"Hah," he said. "I'll bet you actually believe that."

"No, really," I said. "I feel like I can be personally uncomfortable with someone's position without wanting to legislate against that position just because I don't like it. I mean, who really likes abortion? No one does, right? But who am I to tell her or anyone else that they can't have a choice in the matter?"

"Yeah, yeah, yeah," he said, "but we're talking about guns right now. I have a constitutional right to own as many guns as I want to!"

"You do and you should," I said, "but does that mean that I have to? And, why would it be so bad if there were some better background checks and some local or state registry just on the off chance one or some of those guns got misplaced, lost, or stolen and then used in a crime?"

"Well," Charlie said, "our pal the Congressman and I are in lockstep on this issue, although I'm not sure we have a whole lot else in common."

Our chocolate lava cake desserts arrived.

"I gotta ask you, man," he said. "What are you doing here? You know where the Congressman stands on these issues, right? If you disagree with him, why the heck are you even here? He's not going to support abortion in any circumstance, and he's not going to support any restrictions on gun ownership. That's just how he rolls."

"Thank you," the woman to my right chimed in. Turned out her name actually was Mary. "This is to help elect someone with whom we agree, to each of us, a very important issue. The Congressman is Pro-Life, capital P, capital L. He's not a little pro life and not pro life, except, or wishy-washy, like some people are. If you know how the Congressman feels about these issues, and he feels differently than you, then why are you even here? Who invited you?"

I exhaled, secure in the knowledge that the program would begin right after dessert. I put my fork down, took a sip on my still-half-full glass of Cabernet Sauvignon, and, in my own head, at least, did my best Henry V. 'Once more into the breach, dear friends, once more.'

"The Congressman himself invited me," I told them. "We've known one another for over thirty years." Then, I asked my companions if they remembered a state Senator, well-known and well-respected on both sides of the political spectrum, who'd retired some years earlier and was now enjoying chocolate lava cake with the angels and saints. They both allowed as how they knew and fondly remembered the Senator.

"We were together, along with a whole bunch of other people at a charity event for an organization in which we were both deeply, personally invested," I said.

Mary took a forkful of chocolate lava cake. Charlie sat back and crossed his arms.

"A group of, let's call them motorcycle enthusiasts wearing different forms of black leather came into the venue to drop off a sizable contribution to the charity we all were supporting. They corralled the Senator and demanded that in the upcoming legislative session he oppose any law that would require them to wear helmets while cavorting over the highways and byways on their hogs, rice-burners or whatever the heck else they drove.”

“They ought to be able to wear a helmet or not wear a helmet,” my friend to the left said. Charlie’s pretty liberal on this issue.

“I don’t know about that,” Mary chimed in, having devoured her lava cake and looking lasciviously at my as yet uneaten portion. I smiled and slid it over to her.

“Why, thank you,” she said. “You know,” she said, “helmets are a safety issue and have been proven to save lives in motorcycle accidents.”

“Maybe,” Charlie said, but Mary wasn’t quite done.

“And,” she said, “wouldn’t not wearing helmets drive up all of our insurance rates?”

I smiled at her. “That was the Senator’s initial response,” I said.

Ignoring that completely, she went on to gild her own lily. “I believe, if you’re going to be pro life, you need to be pro life,” she said. “If helmets save lives, then they should be mandatory, just like seatbelts.”

I nodded, momentarily considering whether or not I should ask about her view on capital punishment. Discretion allegedly being the better part of valor, I held my tongue.

“Well, the boys in black leather didn’t buy either of those issues,” I said. “They didn’t express any concern about their own safety and they laughed at the notion of insurance rates going up.” Now, I’m only guessing here, but for those particular guys, insurance may not have been a consideration at all. Then, they upped the ante.

“And just so you know, Senator,” one of them said, wagging a meaty finger in front of his face, “if we can’t get your commitment on this, we may just hang on to this donation and then give it to your reelection opponent.”

Now, while the Senator was a diminutive gent, he was not easily or often pushed around.

“Then,” I said to Charlie and Mary and whoever else might have suddenly become entranced overhearing our conversation, “the Senator said this, and it applies to your question as to why I’m here tonight.”

“I understand gentlemen,” he said, “but I’m going to be voting on at least 60 bills that have already been pre-filed by my colleagues. Many of them are going to impact your lives, probably more than the upcoming mandatory helmet law vote. You’re probably going to agree with my vote on maybe 80 or 90% of those bills.”

My dinner companions were both nodding their heads. In politics, it should never be just about one thing, even when to one person it is.

“Now I don’t want these children to lose out on your very, very generous donation,” he told them. “And frankly, I haven’t seen the final draft of the helmet law legislation yet. There might be fatal flaws in it that would nullify the need for a vote. It may not get out of the House, because there’s quite a bit of opposition to it in that chamber. But the larger point is, if your donation to these children is contingent upon my promising to vote against something I haven’t even read yet, then I suggest you take your money and you head on down the road, because that’s just not going to happen here today.”

“It was one of the best examples of politics under pressure I’d ever seen,” I said, “and it’s why I’m here. If we expect the Congressman to vote according to what every one of his donors and supporters wants, he’s in an impossible place. We elect representatives to represent us! We expect them to do, not just what we want, but what they believe is right. We need to trust that they know more than we do about the dozens or, in the Congressman’s case, hundreds of bills that may cross his desk.”

Mary was shoveling the rest of my chocolate lava cake into her mouth so she was, for the moment, silent.

“Did that really happen,” Charlie asked me. “Because you know, he’s dead, the Senator, and there’s no way to check out this little story of yours.” I laughed at him and shook my head.

“Yeah,” I said. “I was there and it went down just that way. But the point of the story is that I will agree with maybe 80 or 90% of how the Congressman votes. There will probably be one, or two, or even a few votes he makes that I won’t agree with, but am I going to sacrifice my support for someone I know and trust on the chance that he and I aren’t 100% in lockstep on all of the issues? No,” I said, “and neither should you.”

“Did the children get the money?” Mary asked.

“They did, and the organization still gets contributions from motorcycle gangs, er, enthusiasts,” I said. “Just because they’re big and look mean doesn’t mean they’re stupid.”

My companions and I sat back as our host introduced the Congressman. He thanked us for coming, spoke for about ten minutes about his record and the lack of record on the part of his opponent, and then asked us to reach into our hearts, and our pockets, to help send him back to Washington for another two years.

Long story short, the Congressman got money from all of us and handily won reelection for the eighth time to one of the safest seats in the entire U.S. Congress.

Abortion, guns, motorcycle helmets ... all issues involving individual rights. Just like Colin Kaepernick’s decision to exercise his individual right to sit or kneel during the National Anthem in order to protest, in his view, the mistreatment of black people in America. The principle of con-

2016: It's Not How you START- It's How you FINISH!

No truer words can be used to describe the real estate market on The Plateau this year than the old Proverb: "It's not how you start-It's how you finish that matters."

On June 30, 2016, the overall real estate market in all categories was down 13.71% per the Highlands/Cashiers MLS which covers Macon, Jackson and

However, comparing the time period from July 1, 2016 to October 15, 2016 to the same time period in 2015, residential sales are up 38.16%, vacant land up 86.67% and condos are up 3.48% for an overall increase in the market for the entire year of 9.64%.

This is quite shocking for a presidential election year since historically over the last 16 years that we have been selling real estate here on the Plateau, these election years are flat to negative. Interestingly as well, sales of homes over $750,000 are up dramatically.

Real estate is an art not a science, but everyone always wants to analyze the reasons why a real estate market behaves a certain way. Why would sales this year reject history and trends and finish on a wildly positive note? Here are some theories:

1. The low interest rate for home mortgages is threatening to increase which encourages even the wealthiest of individuals to move forward to lock in an appealing rate now;

2. The crime and violence in cities is forcing the fortunate folks who can think about living in a safer environment to search and move to these safe havens which this area certainly qualifies;

3. The presidential election this year defies all "reasonable person" standards, so many people have decided to live their lives in the present and not in fear of the future;

4. As prices have yet climbed to the pre-recession prices, it is still a Buyers' market with many good opportunities available;

5. Nothing has spoiled this pristine area with its natural beauty, cultural amenities and incredibly nice people.

Country clubs in the area are doing better than they have in the last eight years as evidenced by the following statistics from the Highlands/Cashiers MLS:

- Cullasaja Club: 14 homes/ 2 lots sold-7 homes pending*;

- Highlands Country Club: 5 homes/1 condo sold-4 homes/1 condo pending;

- Highlands Cove: 4 homes/4 condos/2 lots sold-2 condos pending;

- Highlands Falls: 11 homes/3 condos sold-6 homes/1 condo pending;

- Mountaintop: 3 homes/17 lots sold-2 homes/4 lots pending;

- Wade Hampton: 11 homes/5 lots sold-nothing pending;

Spirituality of Light: Scientific and Biblical Aspects

Rev. Dr. Francis Xavier
Arockiasamy, Ph.D. (physics).
B.Th.,
Administrator, Our Lady of the Mountains Catholic Church, Highlands.

Light plays a vital role in our daily lives. We could not survive without light. It is essential for living things to get energy. In Physics, light is a form of energy and it is a part of the electromagnetic radiation spectrum. It also can be defined as all portions of electromagnetic waves. The electromagnetic waves can be explained by their wavelength, energy and frequency. The main source of light on Earth is the Sun. Sun light provides the energy that plants use to create sugars in the form of starches which release energy into living things. There are many sources of light.

In the theory of light, according to Newton, light was composed of Corpuscles (particles of matter) which were emitted in all directions from a source. According to Plank, light energy is known as "quanta." Albert Einstein used the idea of light, quanta, to explain the photo electric effect.

In the Bible, we know the creation event in the Book of Genesis. In the beginning, when God created the heavens and the earth, the earth was a formless wasteland and darkness covered the abyss, while a mighty wind swept over the waters. Then God said, "Let there be light," and there was light. God saw how good the light was. God separated the light from the darkness. (Genesis 1:1-4) From this passage, God knows the importance of light for living things. God knows that light is essential for living beings to get energy.

God also knows about the sources of light. He also created the sun, moon and stars. In the passages of the Book of Genesis 1:14-16, God said, "Let there be light in the dome of the sky, to separate day from night. Let them mark the fixed times, the days and the years and serve as luminaries in the dome of the sky, to shed light upon the earth." And so it happened: God made the two great lights, the greater one to govern the day, and the lesser one to govern the night; and he made the stars.

In the New Testament, we learn that Jesus himself becomes the light of the world. The Gospel according to John 8:12, Jesus spoke to them again, saying, "I am the light of the world. Whoever follows me will not walk in darkness, but will have the light of life." Since Jesus is the Son of God, He compares himself with the creator, who is the author of light and life.

The spirituality of light is leading the people from the darkness to light.

The role of God is creating the source of light for the benefit of human beings, plants, and animals and also leading the people towards the light of life which stitutionally protected, conscientious and peacefully exercised disagreement, it seems to me, outweigh the individual disagreements themselves.

I suppose a side note is that political discourse doesn't have to be ugly, enemy-centered or personal. Issues are issues and we're always going to have disagreement. The system needs to be challenged and tested in order for this part of our experiment in democracy to stay both flexible and consistent. What it doesn't need is a constant stream of ad hominem attacks on people supposedly of good will who happen to disagree.

I hope with all my heart that after this current chapter is finally over we can all take a deep breath and maybe step back to a less personally contentious, more issue-focused and civilly-conducted conversation about the future of our society and our great nation. I'm really concerned for that future if we can't re-learn to talk with one another instead of shouting at one another.

symbolizes doing good. God is the source of energy and power. He says in the Book of Revelation 1:6, "Who has made us a kingdom, Priests for his God and Father, to him be glory and power forever and ever. Amen."

Spirituality gives meaning to our lives. God is the creator of life. So the spirituality of light is showing God's glory, who is the almighty power. We see from the Gospel according to John 1: 3-5, "All things came to be through him, and without him nothing came to be. What came to be through him was life, and this life was the light of the human race; the light shines in the darkness, and the darkness has not overcome it." So it is our obligation to imitate God who is the source of the light of life, and regulate our life on earth towards doing good which is the spirituality of light.

community.

A United States Army veteran, Charlie Leatherman served three tours of duty overseas before working in the Macon County School system. After retiring as a teacher, Leatherman, who graduated from Western Carolina University, also worked for the Macon County Department of Social Service, Mars Hill College and currently owns Leatherman Tax Service while also working for Drake Enterprise.

Leatherman's political experience is extensive and in addition to serving two terms on the Macon County Board of Commissioners, Leatherman has received several recognition for his work as commissioner and has represented North Carolina on the national level through the North Carolina Association of County Commissioners.

"Macon County is almost half owned by the government, which may always provide for open space for people to enjoy nature. But it also means we need to be careful to be able to provide for the level of services we now deliver to our citizens and hopefully preserve the cultural heritage we have so much of in Macon County. I am not coming in with an "I'll get this done attitude" because past experience has proven that the board of county commissioners is a group; a group whom people have entrusted to make the best decisions for their wellbeing while in office. A group that should have the same common objectives and be flexible enough to understand the real art of politics is found in conciliation for the best solution for the greater good of the populace."

A county's economy dictates so much of everyday life, and ensuring a strong economy is vital for a high quality of life. Both Gillespie and Leatherman have differing views on how to ensure Macon County's economy continues moving forward.

"The secondary housing market will improve only when the national economy improves," said Leatherman. "So county officials need to understand housing will not be the economic engine it once was. Internet companies, both wireless and high speed fiber install and place their services by population density and use for a profit as business is designed to be. The western end of the state is largely government owned. Our local legislative delegation should research ways of getting internet/high speed service to our area as a necessary feature for business growth and entrepreneurial opportunities. Hardships exists where economic development suffers from the lack of government support to grow and held expand businesses.

County government fostering growth and identifying potential areas such as tourism is a step Gillespie believes needs to be taken first.

"Our economy is heavy dependent on tourism and construction for this to change Economic Development should be a collaborative process that takes into consideration our strong points to attract business and encourage expansion coupled with a strong educational back bone that can provide skilled employees," said Gillespie.

While focusing on the county's infrastructure as a starting point for economic development, another focus Leatherman and Gillespie believes needs ultimate attention is public education.

"While we face different challenges today than when my great grandmother was a teacher in a two room school house here in Macon County, we met those challenges and I am confident that we will continue to do so," said Gillespie.

Touting the local government's commitment to public education, Gillespie noted that with fewer teachers and decreasing per-pupil costs over the last five years, the cuts have created an extra burden on county budgets.

Leatherman believes that while the responsibility is shifting from state to local government to fund public education, its a necessary evil because under state law, the school board could sue county government for funding, which has occurred across the state.

"This is just an example of how state government hands down mandates to counties when the state should be funding it," said Leatherman.
